I have a ring-I shall not say where it was obtained, or by what means it came into my possession-it is enough to state Such as Constipation, inward Piles, Fullnuss of Blood, the fact that I have a ring, which, placing on my finger, not only renders me at once invisible, but also enables me to read, plainly, the thoughts of my ac quaintances; that is, as far as I am mymation. Now, vanity forbids me to say that I had any doubts upon the subjectfar from it. Wherever I went, I was al ways greeted with smiles and welcomes; my friends always assured me it was the greatest pleasure in life to see me: that was certainly a most entertaining crea Their power over the above diseases is not excelled ture, full of wit and sprightliness: that possessed such a fund of charity; that gave with such grace as to render it a pleasure to be indebted to me; and, in fact, according to their estimate, I stood on the very highest pinnacle of human goodness. Dr. C. M. Jackson: Dear Sir—For the past two and curiosity, in the shape of my good genius, prompted me to put its virtues to test: so, as I said before, out we sallied I and my ring, upon a tour of espionage Feeling that I possessed, as it were, the key to hidden secrets, my air was doubt less more than usually grand and im ment has always been a theme of admira tion among my acquaintances. With my head, therefore, high in the air, and my ring in my pocket, I pulled the bell with a most important flourish at the door of Mrs. K., which was opened instanter by the obsequious Jeremy, and with many bows I was ushered into the splendid drawing room where, as usual, my pre sence was greeted with exclamations of "Ah, my dear Mr. D " said the kind mistress of the mansion advancing towards me, " how happy we are to see you," while the smiles and blushes of her bright-eyed, blooming daughterspoke more than words. The pensive Serafina asked my opinion of Bleak House Ann requested me to accompany her in with downcast eyes, some drawings for my criticism. By my judgment, each professed herself to be guided. If the bump of self estcem did not at that moment enlarge my pericranum, it was not their fault nor mine. After some time spent in such charming company, I took my leave; that is, as far as the door, for there, slipping on my ring, I immedi ately re-entered just in time to see the timid Lavina strutting across the room as I did, while the epithets "vain dog," "conceited fellow," fell like "iron in my "Really," if he was not such a hand-

An impu dent fellow, to be hanging on so long for nothing!" Now, to what can I assimi late my feelings? Did you ever see the gay bantam, strutting with lordly air and waving plumage before his noisy family of wives and daughters, suddenly hide his diminished head and run with drocping feathers from the mischievous gambols of the house dog? I found her alone, and my importance being somewhat subdued by the events of the morning. I felt more than usually given to the "melting mood." An intersting tele a-tele ensued, which might "ave ended in the most sentimental manner, had it not been for the sudden enrance of her brother, upon which I tore myself away from the girl. Having again recourse to my ring, I resumed.

"How good, how kind you are! I have taken two dear little children under my protection, whose parents have both sudlenly died of a fever." "Here are ten dollars for them my dear Mrs. C-; and for their education eventful morning, of which the results were almost invariably the same. Among all the extensive circle of acquain ances by whom I had been caressed and flattered, not one did I find to whom I could truly apply the name of friend. I fell sick with malodei de cour-my friends (I mean those whom I had once considered s such) daily thronged the house, and my table was covered with notes of kind inquiries and condolements. Even the harming Bessy sent me a nosegay of lora's choicest and sweetest, tied with ove's own color, which my sister brought me, thinking, poor girl, to raise my spirits, or at least to excite a smile of

But for my imely aid you would probably not have discovered until too late, that you had been the prey of the vampires always atendant upon wealth, and a martyr to your own self esteem. True merit, though often the mark of ill will and envy, will finally win a way to every heart. Riches, without the pride of wealth, and unostentatious talents, will be reseived with deference; while, on the contrary, if made a subject of display and parade, will cause not only the censure of the truly good but also the contempt and ridicule of your inferiors-though all may be hidden under the ample cloak which flattery wears.
